Former Chipola student to play Carnegie Hall

It’s a long way from Chipola College to Carnegie Hall. But former Chipola music student James Matthews is making the trip.

Matthews, a piano major at the University of West Florida, recently placed in a piano competition that will allow him to perform at Carnegie Hall. After earning his Associate in Arts degree at Chipola College, he transferred to the UWF. At the advice of a UWF professor, Heidi Salanki, Matthews submitted a video of himself performing Sergei Prokofiev’s “Piano Sonata No. 7” for the 2014 American Protege International Piano and Strings Competition.

Matthews received honorable mention which came with the prize of performing in the Weill Recital Hall at Carnegie Hall on April 20.

Matthews began his musical journey with jazz and blues music when he was only three. He started lessons in his teens and played with his middle school choir.

At Chipola, Matthews learned under music professor Josh Martin. Evelyn Ward, Chipola Director of Fine and Performing Arts, says, “James is a gifted musician. We are so proud that he began his journey at Chipola.”
