Chipola students learn DNA molecular engineering

Chipola College students in Dr. Virginia Baker's Biology for Majors (BSC 2010) lab are engaged in the insertion of foreign DNA (plasmids) into bacterial hosts.

The technique is the same one used medically to produce human insulin in a test tube to be used in the treatment of diabetes.

Dr. Baker said, "Students this term have been unanimously successful in one of the most highly-acclaimed techniques used in molecular biology. They deserve recognition for the successful, practical application of a difficult genetic concept and for the tenacity to successfully engage in the strategies of DNA molecular engineering." The concepts will be expanded using the tools of bioinformatics.

Chipola offers a variety of science courses, including junior and senior level courses leading to Secondary Education degrees in Biology Education.
