Chipola unveils program for school paraprofessionals

Chipola Junior College officials recently unveiled a new educational program designed to help paraprofessionals employed by Jackson County Schools meet the requirements of the "No Child Left Behind Act" (NCLBA).

Passed earlier this year by the federal government, NCLBA requires paraprofessionals (also known as teacher aides) who work in Title I schools, to increase their level of education.

Lillie Speights, director of Title I programs for Jackson County, says, "The intent of the law is to make sure that the people who are assisting in teaching are qualified." The law requires paraprofessionals to earn two years of study at an institution of higher learning or the equivalent of a two-year associate's degree. The law also provides a yet to be determined academic assessment option to meet the requirement. Some 60 Jackson County employees are affected.

Chipola officials presented a program of mostly afternoon courses that will enable the employees to meet the requirements by the January 2006 deadline. Jackson County employees would be reimbursed for successfully completing the courses.

Joan Miller, CJC dean of student services, says, "We are excited about the opportunity we have to help meet the needs of Jackson County. We have been working closely with Lillie Speights, Belva Free and Diane Oswald from Jackson County to develop and make available a plan to meet the new federal requirements." CJC president, Dr. Dale O'Daniel, says, "We had a very good response at the meeting and, as always, stand ready to serve the members of our five county district." In addition to academic course work plans, Chipola officials offered assistance with registration, financial aid, scholarships, and with the college placement test required of all incoming college students.

School employees interested in the CJC program are encouraged to call Dr. Miller at 850-718-2228.
